I have some really big news to share: My first book, Detecting and Reducing Supply Chain Fraud, has been published by Gower Publishing.

(The page link in the upper right corner, "Go to North and South American site", converts pounds to dollars and is appropriate for US orders.)

This has been a 2 ½ year journey from concept submission through approval, manuscript development, editing, and proofing. Through trial and tribulation, during days, nights, and weekends, in between teaching and consulting and everything else, I was writing away as this was the biggest priority on my plate.

Why would I engage in such an encompassing endeavor?

I have a message to shout out to the world. Since 2007, through magazine articles and presentations, I have been delivering my unique perspectives on supply chain fraud detection and reduction to diverse audiences, both domestically and internationally (Mumbai and Hong Kong to-date), with rave reviews. Writing a 76,000 word book was a challenge to be sure but one I knew I must undertake and successfully complete.

I am not the first person to ever discuss the terms "supply chain" and "fraud" together. What I have done is formalized and solidified the term into a single yet multi-faceted business model that well goes beyond some of the typical conversations of procurement fraud, counterfeiting, and asset theft.

Mine is a business model that redefines the supply chain and unifies concepts of technology, operations, audit, governance, law, ethics, and compliance to guide an enterprise to better detect and reduce fraud throughout the organization, domestically and internationally, whether it is being perpetrated from the inside or the outside or both.

And yes, if you purchase a copy I'll be happy to autograph it for you. :-)

Thank you.
