Since January 1996

In May of this year I was invited by the CEO of Proformative (www.proformative.com) to be an instructor. Proformative combines an online educational platform where members can take courses and earn continuing education credits with a social engagement area where members can engage in a question-and-answer dialogue. Course and Q&A topic categories include: finance, accounting, treasury, technology, careers, human resources, operations, legal, risk management, and tax. There are also sponsored white papers and resource papers the latter which are uploaded by members such as me. Proformative's CEO was particularly interested in my supply chain fraud topic.

Proformative member profiles include Chief Financial Officer, Vice President, Accountant, President, Controller, Manager, and Consultant. Its members are global: For example, I was engaged in an interesting inventory counting conversation with someone from one of the Caribbean islands. With 1,250,000 members and growing it is little surprise that its membership is international. And it is free to join.

My course, Auditing for Supply Chain Fraud, which I have presented numerous times in the U.S. and in Mumbai, Hong Kong, and Krakow (Poland) is recorded and now available on the Proformative web site, along with an academic paper I authored titled How Supply Chain Collaboration Benefits The Expanding Role Of The Auditor.

As a benefit to instructors Proformative has provided us with a discount code that we may pass along to our friends and colleagues.

You can find my course by joining Proformative and searching for "supply chain fraud" or by using the link below:

<http://www.proformative.com/courses/auditing-supply-chain-fraud>

When you purchase the course use the discount code Katz10 for a 10% discount off the Proformative course price. But even better, for a limited time only, you can take your first Proformative course for free (even mine) and save the discount code for another course.

So, if you need some continuing education credits for a certification and have been curious what my supply chain fraud detection and reduction business model is about, then I suggest you go to www.proformative.com to get your free membership, engage in some intellectual conversation, avail yourself of resourceful content, and enjoy the educational benefits that await you.

Thanks.
